

Delay in Peace Accord Not to Ruin Israel, Elath Says on Return

Israel will not be ruined, as many think, if the final peace settlement with the Arabs is delayed, according to Eliahu Elath, Israeli Ambassador.

"If the Arabs can wait for peace, we can wait for it," the Ambassador emphasized at a press conference, in which he described his recent six-week trip to Israel. "I am more optimistic than pessimistic about the renewal of conferences at Lausanne," he stated. "Israel shall continue to contribute its share to its success, although we regret some of our proposals have not been taken up."

Ambassador Elath pointed out the number of Arabs in Israel is increasing constantly. He explained that some of the Arabs feel they can live more comfortably in Israel than in their own states. The problem of the Arab natives rejoining their families will be solved mainly by settlement, the Ambassador added.

Housing Big Problem.
In a prepared statement, Mr. Elath said progress has been made in Israel since the cessation of hostilities with the neighboring Arab states. It continued:

"The difficulties of the new immigrants are not so much in the field of employment as in housing, which is the most pressing state problem today and one which my government hopes to solve by using every available means to build large-scale housing developments and to import prefabricated houses."

"A large part of the new immigration (250,000 in 12 months) has been absorbed into agriculture. . . . This has increased agricultural productivity by 18 per cent in the last three months and will, in the end, make Israel less dependent on outside sources for food."

Notes Division of Holy Places.
Mr. Elath, in his statement, emphasized that Israel has no quarrel with the Christian world over the holy places.

"It is the firm belief of my government that a realistic approach to the problem of Jerusalem will resolve outstanding difficulties satisfactorily to all parties concerned," the statement continued. "It is well to remember that 95 per cent of the holy places are in Arab territory."

The Ambassador is scheduled to report his findings to Secretary of State Acheson tomorrow.

Commons Kills Changes In Steel Nationalization

By the Associated Press
LONDON, July 26.—The Labor Party's overwhelming majority in the House of Commons yesterday started repealing amendments to the steel nationalization bill passed by Conservatives in the House of Lords.

The Conservatives have tried to delay the date of the government's taking over of the industry until after new general elections. Commons is expected to return the bill to its original state. A new bill, limiting the power of the House of Lords, probably will make the peers' delaying attempts meaningless.
